

Green Lit: Call for donated audio works

Green Lit is a podcast where literally anything goes. An uncurated depository of donated audio, that winds up here because it needs a place to stay. Plotless fiction, rambling sonic imaginings, documentaries that were pitched and rejected 50 times but you made anyway... It's a yes from us (me). It's all Green Lit!

This is a passion project, born out of a need for a space to put my own audio oddities and outcasts. Anyone and everyone is welcome to donate a finished piece, or to make something new/spontaneous just for the joy of it.

Although it's designed to be a space for pieces that don't have another home, those who like to sofa surf are also welcome. And perhaps they'll one day move on to a bigger place of their own (i.e. you are in complete control of your work, and can continue to submit your piece wherever else you please).

I am giving this a trial run to see what shape it takes, so submissions are open until 1st February. We'll see how it goes after that! To submit something, just drop me a line: suzie.radio@gmail.com.

If you know anybody who might like to hear about this call, please feel free to forward it!

*artwork subject to change, I am a sound artist not a visual one!
